

Gossip

Game

Players sit in a circle. The first player makes up a sentence and then whispers the sentence to the next player, who whispers it to the next player, and so on. The last person to receive the message says it out loud to the group. The first player then repeats the original sentence, showing how much the sentence has changed.

How can words get changed? Why is it important to find out what was really said? How can knowing this help us get information?